Riga Declaration

Gathered in Riga, from 22nd to 24th September 2016, for a seminar on the “Cooperation of the Public and Private sector in Land Management” and its second annual General Assembly, CLGE solemnly stresses the following conclusions

“The guarantee of immovable property rights is an intrinsic part of our economy and society.

The continuum of systems presented in Riga, based on a mix of public and private surveying, reveals that property rights are typically guaranteed by the State, in its sovereign role, and with varying degrees of participation from the private sector.

The enormous importance of immovable property to our economies underlines the need for the regulation of surveying in order to achieve the adequate protection of property rights and to protect the public interest.

The digital transformation underway in our sector shows that the surveyor has a fundamental role in creating the future geodigitally enabled world.”
